When The End Came

29 0 2

Chapter 1 by Sydney Jett

It started with a bang, then a crash then a boom. The ray of white came out of the building and sweep the earth, disintegrating everything in it path. Well almost everything. I woke up were I passed out, right next to Blake. My vision was blurry and I felt like I was getting over a hang over. I slowly rose up tumbling a little as I did. I turned to see Blake he looked like he was dead. My brain couldn't get a thought threw. I bent down to see if he was still alive. He pulse was weak but he was going to be ok. He had just sustained a slight head injury. As for I on the other hand had no idea what the heck was going on. I looked out the window and saw nothing except bodies that looked as if they had been scorched by the mystery white light. As I was looking out i saw something strange, one of the bodies rose. I froze of fear. The body looked up at me in the house and started to run to were I was. It hit the window with a BANG. It was a man, he body black as night. His face was like tar it oozes off of him like ice cream in a hot sun, only to reveal more tar. The man was no longer a man. He was something that couldn't be explained. I back away from the window. As I did the thousand of bodies that once laid dead in front of me all stood up and ran toward the house were we where in. The end had came, and there was no reversing it.
